1. The various types of rigid insulation
2. A comparison of properties including R values
3. New developments and standards including issues of long term thermal resistance and ASTM C518
4. Rigid Insulation's role in making buildings more sustainable in the following areas:
  - Energy performance
  - Construction Waste Management
  - Re-Use Warranties
  - Local/Regional Materials
  - Recycled Content
5. Protected membrane roofing systems (PMR)
6. New roofing code information

Provider: Dow Building Solutions

THE PRESENTER:

Eric Verley has been associated in the commercial construction market since 1985 and was previously an educator in middle school science and the collegiate sciences. Since his teaching years he has been associated with various national distributors in the Upstate NY market. He had responsibilities for roofing designs and wall designs in commercial and residential applications.

In 1996 Eric became the Upstate representative for Carlisle Syntech Roofing and in 2000 left to join the Dow Chemical Team.

Through the time spent with Dow Chemical, Eric spends the majority of time with the architectural community doing seminars. In 2004 was guest speaker for a code officials meeting in Lake Placid to 165 code officials

Eric brings to the seminar a vast knowledge base in analyzing and studying what the moisture management in walls designs is doing.

- This event is produced by the American Institute of Architects, Eastern New York Chapter in accordance with its educational mission.
